- 1. Chinese Communist connections in the Philippines first developed with the establishment of a trade union group in 1935. Since then, activities of Chinese Communists in the Philippines have been alternately overt and concealed.
- 2. During the war, Chinese Communists organized the Overseas Chinese 48
 Detaclment (幸僑四十八支隊). After the war, they published two newspapers, the Overseas Chinese Monitor (Kua Chiaio Tao Pao), (幸僑真報) and the Overseas Chinese Commercial Daily (Chiaio Shang Kung Pao) (僑商公報).

A period of clandestine activity began in 1947, when the Chinese Communist organization in the Philippines was dissolved and all important leaders fled to Hong Kong. The few leaders who remained joined Philippine Communist guarrilla units in the Hashan (Hagdaman Peak) area. About 200 well-organized members succeeded in infiltrating into Clark Field as workers.*

- 3. In the late months of 1949, activities of Chinese Communists in the Philippines were increased. Chinese Communists gained control of the China Broadcasting Society in Manila, the Overseas Chinese Middle School, the Youth Friendship Society. (青年報道法), and the Hung Kuang School, organized by the Hung Mon (三共 門) Society ******
 Most pro-Communist Chinese in the Philippines are members of this secret Hung Men organization.
- 4. Leaders of Chinese Communist activity include HUANG Ting-min (資 場份) Chairman of the Overseas Chinese Chamber of Commerce, and CH'IN (身))* Chairman of the Overseas Chinese Chamber of Commerce in Lucent. *********

 These men conceal their Communist activities with their organizational duties for the Philippine Chinese Chamber of Commerce.
